

All of us here are pleased that the courts have acquitted him and made it clear that in Russia access to environmental information is a constitutional right. Now, however, he is to go before the courts once more because the public prosecutor is appealing.